The University of Tennessee Center for Renewable Carbon, in partnership with the Southeastern Regional Sun Grant Center, is hosting the 4th International Conference on Chemicals and Products from Renewable Carbon. This meeting is a unique opportunity for scientists and engineers from around the world to assemble and share ideas regarding the integrated biorefinery concept. The technical program consists of a number of symposia related to cell wall deconstruction and biomass fractionation, catalytic conversion of lignin and carbohydrates, engineered feedstocks, selective transformation of lignin, advanced thermochemical processes for biomass, structural analysis of biomass architecture, and more.

Every effort is being made to keep registration fees low, making this unique conference accessible to the broader research community. Your organization's sponsorship can provide much needed financial support. Moreover, sponsorship is an excellent means to provide visibility to your organization and to promote your brand. There is a variety of sponsorship packages and opportunities. Please join us in St. Simons Island, GA from November 8 – 11, 2016 to learn more about the frontiers in biorefining. We hope you will consider supporting this exchange of information on the state-of-the-science of biorefining by leading researchers, and joining in the event at St. Simons Island, GA.

The conference will be held at the King and Prince Beach and Golf Resort, St. Simons Island, GA. Please explore <http://www.frontiersinbiorefining.org> for further details.
